This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

THE original rolls of accounts of the Benedictine monastery of Saint Mary of Abingdon, printed in this volume, are preserved in the collection of Sir Harry Verney, Bart., who kindly permitted them to be deposited in the Record Office for the purpose of being edited for this Society. His possession of them is accounted for by the fact that the site of the Abbey came to the Verneys.[a]

The task of editing these accounts was at first entrusted to Mr. G. H. Overend, F.S.A., of the Public Record Office, who made transcripts of two of them, but was unable to find the time necessary for the work, which was handed over to me, on his recommendation, with many suggestions and references; and he has continued to take the utmost interest in the subject up to the very last.

The rolls have been divided into two classes: the first, consisting of twenty-six accounts of the officers of the abbey, are printed in full; the second, consisting of eleven accounts of its manorial officers, with two rentals and a court roll, have been abstracted. It was not thought worth while to print the latter at length, because they closely resemble other manorial accounts, of which there is no scarcity. The collection comprises also a few deeds, of which abstracts are given.

[a] In 1629 Ralph Verney married Mary, daughter and heiress of John Blacknall, of Abingdon, Esquire, a descendant of the purchaser from the Crown grantee. It is stated that "John Verney" possessed a Register of this abbey; and "Nasmith, in a note, queries whether the Register seen by Leland was not the same as this." (Collectanea Top. et Gen., i. 74.) One would like to know what has become of this cartulary.

A brief description of these rolls and deeds was given by the late Mr. John Bruce in his "Letters and Papers of the Verney Family," edited by him for this Society in 1853. Besides the deeds here abstracted, he refers to a copy of an Indulgence, dated 1308, granted to all persons who should contribute to the fabric of the lotorium or lavatory,[a] but I have not seen that document.

Accounts of monastic officers are somewhat rare. In the large collection of "Ministers' Accounts" preserved at the Public Record Office there are only two series of importance, one being the rolls of the neighbouring Priory of Burcester, summaries of which have been printed by the Rev. J. C. Blomfield in his "History of Bicester" (1884); the other being those of Ramsey Abbey, which are comparatively meagre.[b]

The form of ancient accounts is much more picturesque than that which has been adopted in modern times. The headings and sub-headings, and the paragraphical arrangement, with sums and sums total, give an air of readableness to them which is wanting in tabular columns. But it is horrifying to modern notions to think of the trouble which was involved in arriving at the arithmetical results. In this respect these rolls resemble all ancient accounts down to about the seventeenth century, with perhaps only one exception. The Tellers' Rolls of the Exchequer are, I believe, unique in giving two columns, one of receipts, the other of payments, and in setting out the amounts also in columns. The Issue Rolls and the Subsidy Rolls, however, go so far as to specify the amount of each entry in a separate column.

[a] The lotorium may possibly have been the laundry, which at a later date seems to have been a building of goodly size; but the lavatory was also a separate office, where the monks performed their ablutions at stated times of the day. See the Charters, &c., of the Priory of Finchale (Surtees Society).

[b] Some of the Burcester rolls have been printed in full in Dunkin's History of Bullingdon and Ploughley Hundreds. Several extensive collections of accounts of the Priories of Coldingham, Finchale, Jarrow, and Wearmouth were published many years ago by the Surtees Society, under the editorship of James Raine, but these accounts were rendered mostly by the heads of small houses, and not by the obedientiars of a large one. The Durham Household Book, published by the same Society, consists of the Bursars' Accounts of the monastery of Durham.

At first sight it seems impossible to add up the items comprised in each paragraph without a much greater amount of mental effort than is involved in adding up a column of Arabic numerals. But the accountant did not then keep figures in his head as we do. He dotted down the number of c's, x's, and v's, and counted the number of single strokes, on a separate paper or parchment, and then it was easy to tot up the amount. Sometimes these workings are found in the margins of rolls. If any particular item, or the given price of a single article, was not to be taken into account, its sum was underlined in the original, as a caution to the computer; and this feature has been represented by italics in the present volume. The headings of the paragraphs are placed in the margins of the rolls, but as it would take up too much space to represent this in print, they are printed in italics at the beginning of each paragraph, without, it is hoped, sacrificing perspicuity.

The first portion of each account is invariably "the Receipt," as it is usually called, although it consists of various sources of revenue, each with its separate "sum"; the whole being brought together in a sum total. Two forms of the word are used, one being Receptio at the beginning, the other Recepta (feminine, singular) at the end. The neuter plural form Recepta, or receipts, is sometimes used in the margins.

The Receipt is followed by the "Expenses," also usually subdivided into particular classes of payments, with their separate "sums," of which a sum total is given at the end. If the accountant had received more than he paid, he then set out the balance, introducing it with the words, "And so more Received than Expended." Such balance was carried over to the next year, less any allowances which he might claim at the audit; and in the next account the first entry would consist of "the arrears" (arreragia), as the balance was called. When the Expenses exceeded the Receipts, either the accountant would be paid the difference by the succeeding officer, or, if he continued in office, he would be credited with the amount in the first entry of the next account, where it would be described as "surplusage." This term sounds strange to us, who usually associate a surplus with a balance in hand, rather than with a deficit.

Many of the abbey accounts then give a list of "debtors" and "creditors" of the different offices. The manorial accounts specify the debtors who had not been brought to book under the head of "super," the amount resting in charge "upon" each debtor being specified.

So far we have been regarding the "face" of the roll only. On its "dorse" there is frequently an account or inventory of some kind. The abbey accounts give particulars of the grain, stock, furniture, church goods, utensils, tools and medicines remaining in store.[a] The manorial accounts usually give a "grange account" and a "stock account," setting out the quantities of corn and the numbers of horses, cattle, sheep, poultry, &c., and showing how they had been disposed of, and how much or how many remained on hand.

This explanation will suffice for the form of the accounts. We may now refer to their matter.

The collection comprises specimens of the accounts of nearly all the principal officers of the abbey from the year 1322 to the year 1479. It is, of course, a mere fragment of what in its entirety would have been an enormous one. No doubt many rolls perished at the dissolution of the abbey, but it is highly probable that the greater number were destroyed from time to time before that event, as being of no value after the accounts had been settled and forgotten.

Some explanation may be required of the title given to these principal officers. They were termed "obedientiarii" because they were under subjection to the Rule. The title was limited exclusively to such of the monks as held offices, and is never applied to the lay servants, of however great standing. There has been some doubt as to the proper mode of Englishing this long word. Some writers avoid the difficulty either by using the Latin word or by translating it as "monastic officers." Others adopt varying Anglicised forms, of which the best is "obedientiaries;" but the termination "ary" most commonly implies an office rather than an officer. The French are also divided in opinion on the subject, using both "obédientiaire" and "obédiencier," and we might likewise use "obediencer," but this would be difficult to accentuate. Following analogy, I have adopted the form which appears in the title.

The duties and emoluments of these officers are described in the treatise entitled De Obedientiariis Abbatiæ Abbendonensis, edited by Mr. Stevenson in the Appendix to the Chronicle of Abingdon.[a] That treatise may be regarded as a declaration of what they ought to have done in theory, while the accounts show what they really did in practice.

The abbey officers rendered their accounts yearly at Midsummer, on the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, but in no single year do we possess the accounts of all the officers, or even of several of them, which would have been an inestimable advantage for the purposes of comparison. Under these circumstances we may disregard dates, and consider the accounts in the order of their importance.

The most important accounts are those of the Treasurers of the Convent, the first being dated in 1375-1376. There were always two Treasurers of the Convent, one of whom at a later date was the Abbot. The Abbot had a Treasurer of his own, who is referred to in several places, but as we do not possess any of his accounts it is probable that he was not bound to render any, being personally answerable to the Abbot, in whose chamber he slept. The manorial officers paid over their balances either to the Abbot himself or to his Treasurer. It was the duty of the Abbot's Treasurer to administer the external affairs of the monastery, and to join the Steward in holding the manorial courts. In the treatise above referred to these two officers are somewhat obscurely described as "Procurator" and "Dapifer Abbatis."[a] The bailiff's accounts speak of the former as "Treasurer of the Abbey," and therefore he was probably superior in rank to the Treasurers of the Convent, who were not however accountable to him, and to whom he paid no portion of his receipts, though he once owed them moneys in respect of the "office of Cellarer," and he paid a few small sums to certain of the obedientiars. The Abbot's Treasurer is not classed with the obedientiars proper in the treatise, which does not apparently mention the Convent's Treasurers at all; but, of course, the term was applicable to all the officers, and even to the Abbot himself. In these accounts there are two references to a "private Treasurer," to whom payments were due for arms, but this seems to have been only a temporary appointment. But to return to the first account of the Treasurers of the Convent.

The Treasurers began their financial year with the large nominal balance of $1,582^{l}\ 2^{s}\ 1^{d}$ left over from the previous year, but it will be seen that it probably consisted for the most part of debts due to the office from the Abbot and others, the Abbot being the principal debtor. Including this balance, their total receipts for the current year were $1,935^{l}\ 11^{s}\ 8\frac{1}{2}^{d}$; so that the amount actually received by them, or rather due to them, within that period amounted to $353^{l}\ 9^{s}\ 7\frac{1}{2}^{d}$. Their income was made up partly of contributions from the various officers of the abbey, namely, the Precentor, the Sacristan, the Cellarer, the Pittancer, the Lignar, the Keeper of the Work, the Refectorer, the Almoner, the Keeper of Cuddesdon, and the Wardens of the Chapel of St. Edmund. It must not be inferred that the sums so received were the balances of the accounts of those officers; on the contrary, they were fixed annual payments which we shall elsewhere find described as consuetudines, or customs. In fact, there is nothing to show that the obendientiars were accountable either to the Abbot's Treasurer or to the Treasurers of the Convent, as Mr. Bruce supposed.[a] The Treasurers did, however, receive the balance of the Cellarer's account, perhaps because they were temporarily superintending the duties of that office.

Several large sums were derived from corn, malt, and cheese remaining in the Abbot's hands from the preceding year; but the greater portion of the malt, 383 quarters, was assigned to the Cellarer "to brew for the Convent," its ale being evidently great in quantity and good in quality. The large sum of 15^{l} 8^{s} 4^{d} was received from the Abbot for a certain number of loaves, received by him from the Cellarer of the Convent, "of favour," over and above the fixed number required for the daily provision of the Convent, and for certain usual "liveries;" likewise for wine on the feast of St. Edward the King, and on the obits of King Edgar and Abbot Robert,[b] at the rate of 5^{d} per gallon, 26 gallons being consumed on each occasion. Thus was the Anglo-Saxon origin of the Abbey kept in memory. It has been alleged that the Abbey was of Romano-British origin, but the monks of the fourteenth century preserved no traditions of that early period.

The monks were accustomed to receive a special allowance of wine from the Abbot, or from one or other of the obedientiars, on [a] Letters and Papers of the Verney Family, p. 9.

[b] "Hugh" in a later account, p. 42. Abbot Hugh held office from 1189 to 1221; Robert de Gareford was Abbot from 1330 to 1333. As to King Edgar, though he was not the founder of the abbey, he gave it the first royal charter; and about the time of this account the abbey obtained a confirmation of it from Richard II. In the next reign the Abbot and Convent petitioned for a further confirmation in respect of the manors of Whisshelee and Hurst, in which the Foresters of Windsor made some claim. (County Placita, Berks, No. 31.)

sixty-eight days of the year; the Abbot furnishing it only on the days of Saint Guthlac the Confessor, the obit of King Edgar, and the obit of Abbot Robert.[a]

Other sums were received from certain officers of the abbey for wastel-bread and collations or beer-drinkings, on the feast of Saint Luke and the obits of Abbots [Luke and] Roger, and on the obits of Abbots Roger[b] and William.

From the Wardens of St. Edmund's Chapel 18^{d} was received for collations on St. Edmund's feast. The Keeper of Cuddesdon paid 23^{s} 4^{d} for wine on the six principal feasts, "and no more, because he shall find wine in Cœna Domini."

Besides these sources of income the Treasurers had the rents of certain tenements in Abingdon assigned to them, but the amount received from this source was comparatively small, viz., 4^{l} 7^{s} 6^{d}. A somewhat larger sum, 8^{l}, was received from the Sacristan, the Keeper of the Work, and the Lignar, for "the expenses of the autumn," or for "the autumnal feasts," according to a later account[c]

The church of la Dene was appropriated to the Treasurers, and with its glebe land was leased by them to a farmer for a term of years at the yearly rent of 33^{l} 6^{s} 8^{d}.

Lastly, their receipts included several sums arising from gifts and legacies, and from stone sold at Whateley.

On the other side of the account some of the expenses are [a] This does not appear in the accounts, but the treatise De Consuetudinibus Abbendoniæ gives a list of the days, and of the officers who had to furnish the wine on each occasion (Chronicle of Abingdon, ii. 314). The Lignar is there mentioned among the obedientiars, but not the Curtar, nor the Hostiler.

[c] That account states that 53^{s} 4^{d} was received from each of the three, and that the Treasurers had to "find" out of the sum total for five signationes 40^{s}, viz., for each signatio 8^{s}. Nothing was received from the Kitchener, "because he shall serve the same signationes daily on flesh days, like as it is served to the Socii of favour" (de misericordia). This word signatio appears to have two meanings in these rolls, one being "the signing with the cross," the other being the "assignment" of lands, rents, &c. As to the latter, see the Cartulary of Ramsey, ii. 215, seq.

classed as "necessary," "allowed," and "unexpected." Just as we found that some of the "receipts" were not actually received within the period of the account, so it would appear that some of the "expenses" were not actually paid, for the payees turn up again at the end of the account. The outgoings include repayments of various kinds to the Abbot, to officers of the abbey, and to some outsiders, including a rector, the vicar of St. Nicholas', and the lord of a manor. There were several payments to the poor and to poor scholars. Three barbers were paid 30^{s} a year. The "ringers of the church" received 20^{d} for ringing on four obits kept on the feast of the Translation of Saint Benedict; 3^{s} was paid to the Sacristan for a herse, and 27^{s} 11^{d} was expended for a "pittance"[a] and wine, on the same feast. 73^{s} 4^{d}[b] went to the Infirmarer for medicine, and for firewood used in making the same. 12^{d} was paid for "linen cloth for Abbot Nicholas," which was a distribution to the poor on the obit of that abbot.[c] Rents were paid for certain tenements. 6^{s} 8^{d} was paid to the Pope's procurator; and this seems to have been a fixed yearly payment. A payment was made to two students at Oxford for a certain period. A later account explains that a yearly pension was paid to these two students "under the Benedictine Constitutions," of which 11^{l} 2^{s} 8^{d} was paid by the Treasurers, and the rest was received by them from the Chamberlain, the Cellarer, the

[b] This was a fixed yearly amount; see p. 44.

[c] His full name was Nicholas of Coleham, or Culham. That village is in Oxfordshire, but only a mile from Abingdon, on the opposite bank of the Thames. It may be remarked that we do not know the real surnames of many of the abbots and monks. As Mr. Blomfield says, "it was a rule of the religious that, when they took upon themselves monastic vows, they abandoned the use of their family name, and assumed that of the place from which they came." Hence we find many of the monks of Abingdon named after localities adjacent. (History of Bicester, pp. 117, 122.) Abbot Nicholas is said to have built the church of Saint Nicholas without the west gate of the abbey, that Saint being the patron of the people; but according to Lysons, the church was much older than the time of Abbot Nicholas, who held office from 1289 to 1307.

Refectorer, and from "the customary oblations." A payment of 6s 8d was made to Master Bartholomew, the physician; and 13s 4d was allowed for the medicine of the Subprior, over and above the Infirmarer's account.

Among the "unexpected" expenses the sum of 14s 8d was spent in wine for the Convent on Whitsunday;[a] and their oblations "against Christmas" amounted to 6s. Small sums were paid to the deacons and novices, "among the Socii," and to celebrants and readers. 5s was paid for wine and ale sent as exennia or gifts to the Abbot and Prior on certain occasions. The entry is not clear here, but that this is its meaning will appear from other accounts. 6s 8d was paid for "our shoeing," that is, of the two Treasurers; and 6s 8d for "our grand Mass, because twice this year." Similar items to these three last occur in most of the accounts of the other offices. John, the claviger, is mentioned. There are payments to the Pope and the Bishop of Salisbury, and expenses at the visitation of the abbey by "the Clerks of Lincoln."

But the chief business of the Treasurers was not, as might have been expected, to make general provision for the Convent, either by attending to it themselves or by making payments to the Kitchener and other officers for the purpose. The greater portion of their revenue was, in point of fact, expended in building operations; and it would appear that the "customs" they received from their fellow obedientiars were specially devoted to this object under an ordinance. Large sums were laid out by them on "the Old Work" and "the New Work," as the different portions of the fabric of the Church were termed.[b] "The New Wear" absorbed

[a] Wine was also supplied by the Treasurers at Easter; see p. 45.

[b] Not long previously there had been two royal licences for the conveyance of messuages and lands to the Abbot and Convent in support of the fabric of the Abbey. Two of the messuages were in Oxford; and nine messuages, one toft, two shops, seven virgates of land, and 40s of rent were in Abingdon, Cumnor, Wootton, and Bradley, Berks. (Patent Rolls, 37 Edw. III., p. 1, m. 10; 47 Edw. III., p. 1, m. 25.) The entries in the accounts may be compared with the Fabric Rolls of York Minster. (Surtees Society.)

a large sum, and the tenements in Abingdon belonging to this office required thatching and other repairs.

The total expenses were 294^{l} 0^{s} 11¼^{d}, being 59^{l} 8^{s} 8¼^{d} less than the receipts for the current year, so that the Treasurers had a large nominal balance; but under the head of "debtors" the large sum of 1374^{l} 3^{s} 4^{d} was due from the Abbot for the past year, perhaps for several preceding years, and 94^{l} 13^{s} 7^{d} for the present year; the sum due from him for the current year being stated to be for wheat, malt, &c. A large total sum was due from officers and others. A much smaller sum was due to "creditors." [a]

A similar account of the Treasurers occurs a few years later, in 1383-4. They started with a nominal balance in hand of 2,179^{l} 4^{s} 10½^{d}, more than 200^{l} in excess of the year 1375-6, but chiefly consisting of debts from the Abbot. It does not appear that he was acting as their banker, but rather that he continually failed to pay sums due from himself to the office. The receipts are derived from the same sources as before. A very small sum was received for eels taken at the Wear. 100^{s} was received as a gift from the Abbot to "the New Work;" and 70^{s} from the Chamberlain, the Sacristan, the Keeper of the Work, the Lignar, the Cellarer, the Refectorer and the Gardener for "good ale and spices," viz. 10^{s} from each.[b]

The expenses are also much the same as before. The "Master Physician" received 100^{s}; the "instructor of the youths" 50^{s}. To a certain student 13^{s} 4^{d} was paid for his cope; he appears to have become a priest this year, but "he does not yet receive from the Chamber and from oblations like his fellow priests." This explains the status of the "Socii," who are constantly referred to without any further description. One Socius was attached to most, if not to each of the offices, probably as a deputy. The Sacristan seems to have got into difficulties, as 6[l] is paid to him "for the relief of his office." It was not, however, the special province of the Treasurers to relieve in this way, though there is one other instance of their having done so. Any officer who had a large balance in hand might be called upon to hand over part of it to another officer who had a deficit. Thomas, the Abbot's marshal, had occupied a tenement belonging to the Treasurers, and was pardoned for part of the rent, in consideration of the expenses which he had laid out upon it. A female tenant was also pardoned her rent because of her poverty. A stipend was paid to a servant in the Infirmary.

[a] See also Mr. Bruce's remarks on this account, p. 11.

[b] Spices are frequently referred to in these rolls, in the Appendices to the Chronicle of Abingdon, and in the Burcester Rolls, without any further description. What was included under the head of spicery or grocery in those times may be seen in the Durham Household Book, and in the Rolls of Finchale Priory. The following is a list: almonds, aniseed, biscuits, cinnamon, cloves, confects, currants or small raisins, dates, figs, ginger, grains (pepper unground), liquorice, mace, nutmegs, pepper, plate (a sweetmeat so called), pomegranates, prunes, great raisins, rice, saffron, sanders, sugar, sukkets, turnsole. Maigne d'Arnis describes them generally as "aliments qui composent le repas du soir les jours du jeûne, tels que les pâtisseries, les sucreries, les confitures, les fruits, &c."

Tenths were paid to the King for the churches of Chieveley and Cumnor, besides expenses about the payment of tenths in the diocese of Lincoln. 4[s] was paid to "our chaplains." "In our medicine, because of varied and long-continued sickness, 39[s] 11½[d]." The small sum of 20[d] was paid to "our clerk" for a large amount specified labour. The Treasurers paid some large debts of the Kitchener to certain persons. 10[s] was paid to the barber of the Infirmary. A reward was given to a man bringing exennia. 8[s] 6[d] was spent in wine for the Convent on the day of the Apostles Peter and Paul, probably about 20 gallons.

Besides the expenses of "the New Work," the Wear, and the tenements, as before, this account contains "expenses for glass," "expenses about a dovecote made in a tenement," and "expenses about the seats of the Cloister." The first of these includes payments to Simon the glass-maker for the "oylets" of three windows of the Cloister, and for 36 feet of glass for the third window of the Cloister.[a] 10[d] was paid for the oblations of the glasiers against Christmas. Other payments were made for the ironwork (ferramentis) of four windows of the Cloister, and for white glass; and a gift of a pellis cordiban' was made to Brother Nicholas Drayton "for his pains taken about the writing which is in the windows of the Cloister," of courtesy or bounty—ex curialitate, an expression which frequently occurs in these accounts.

The dovecote was an expensive affair; it cost nearly as much as the Cloister windows, and more than twice as much as the seats of the Cloister. It was made of stone, and in its erection a scaffold was necessary. Part of the timber for the seats was bought of the Kitchener, a good instance of the entire independence of each office, and of the transaction of business between each by money payments.

The third of the Treasurers' Accounts is dated 1440-1441, the Abbot then being one of the two Treasurers of the Convent.[a] The balance in hand at the beginning of the year had dwindled to the small sum of $124^{l}\ 0^{s}\ 11\frac{1}{2}^{d}$. Mr. Bruce supposed that this was due "to public troubles and a large outlay in building"; but it is more probable that the abnormal debts previously mentioned had been written off, though it is quite true that the abbey had suffered great losses.[b] Deducting that sum, the receipts for the year amounted to only $210^{l}\ 7^{s}\ 5^{d}$, a great falling off, which might be supposed to indicate that the Abbey revenues had considerably diminished between 1384 and 1440. But it seems that the Treasurers no longer received the sums entered under the head of Alia receptio in the preceding accounts, which sums had amounted to more than 100^{l} yearly on the average. Possibly these had always belonged and had been re-transferred to the Cellarer, but we have no accounts of that officer.

[a] This Abbot was William Assbendon, who held office from 1436 to 1469. The Monasticon, quoting Willis, says of him: "He and his successor, John Sante (1469-1495), with his two immediate predecessors, Hamme (1427) and Salford (1428-1436), built the tower in the middle of the church, all the body of the church, and the towers at the west end of it." He had formerly been the Abbot's Treasurer in 1424-5; p. 152. He also appears to have been Keeper of Cuddesdon in 1440-1, and as such to have paid "customs."

In the first paragraph of the receipts we obtain full corroboration of the view above taken that the moneys received by the Treasurers were consuetudines and not balances. It is clear that they were customary payments due from the respective but not subordinate officers of the Abbey; and here, as before, they are described under the general head of "receptio consueta." Besides these, other payments were received from the obedientiars under the name of "new impositions," to defray the costs of "the New Work;" with 40s from the Abbot for the high mass of the Treasurer, Curtar, and Chaplain of the Abbot; and 30s from the same for wastel-bread on the fifteen principal feasts.

Although the Treasurers' income had diminished, they received a larger number of rents than their predecessors in office. They still occasionally obtained legacies or gifts. After making deductions for "repayments of rent" to other officers in respect of certain tenements, and for "default of rents" owing to the vacancy of several houses, they set out their expenses in the Convent, including the sum of 30s yearly paid to three barbers. Probably as a consequence of the comparative poverty of this office, the Convent received no "pittances" on the feast of the Translation of Saint Benedict, and had no allowance of wine on any of the six principal feasts of the year. These allowances of wine were, as we have seen, the sole contributions of the Treasurers in the shape of provisions. For the same reason, it may be, the Treasurers were excused by the Abbot from paying their quota to "the contribution of the general Chapter;"[a] and it is stated that they had been similarly relieved in the two years preceding. There are

[a] It is not stated where this general chapter was held. In 1225 the Abbots of Evesham and Abingdon had presided at a general chapter of the Benedictine monks held at St. Andrew's, Northampton. The Constitutions made by them are preserved in Cott. MS., Jul. D. II., 162. (Monasticon, i., 509.) As to the chapter of 1279, see post. In 1290, a general chapter was held at Abingdon. (Annales Monastici, ed. by Dr. Luard, ii., 153.)

however payments to the Precentor; to chanters or singers at Christmas and other feasts; for cloth bought for six servants, all named, at Christmas; to the physician; to the "instructor" of the scholars; to the students at Oxford for gaudies; and for necessaries bought for two novices "against their entering into the religion."[a] As the rest of this account is unfortunately lost, we cannot ascertain whether the Treasurers continued to make both ends meet.

The next officer in importance, at least in respect of the amount of moneys passing through his hands, was the Kitchener. We have only one of the accounts of this office, and that in a very decayed condition. The precise date has been lost, but it belongs to the reign of Edward III. The total receipts in this office for the year were close upon £300, not including a sum remaining over from the previous year.[b]

The Kitchener's receipts consisted of rents of tenements and lands in Abingdon and elsewhere, some being received from "the rent of the Pittancer," and from "the rent of the Convent." Payments were received for stallage at the fairs, "except from the tenements of the obedientiars." The moneys received from the portmoot, the court of pie-powder, and "assize broken" are not reckoned, because they had been spent in wages, "in vagabonds," and in pardons. The second of these expressions probably refers to expenses incurred in dealing with troublesome persons at fair-time. 11s accrued from waifs and estrays, and rents of 4lb. and 2lb. of wax were due from certain tenements. A palfrey was sold for 13s.

Small quantities of corn, mixtillion, and malt were received from "the mill under the Court," and from "Okkemulle." Portions of the corn and mixtillion were paid as stipends to Robert the bailiff, Henry the smith, a carter, a gardener, and a dairywoman, a small portion being used "in the expenses of the house." Of the malt portions were given to the two millers for their stipends, and three bushels went to feed the geese. 6s was obtained from "the fishery of Okke," that is, the river Ock, which runs into the Thames just below Abingdon.

[a] "The ceremonial at the profession of novitiates" in this abbey is described in Cott. MS., Claud. C. IX., f. 184 (Monasticon).

[b] There were two kitchens, the Abbot's and the Monks'. "The Kitchener of the monks" had jurisdiction over the latter only. The special qualities expected in him are described in the treatise on the Obedientiars. See Mr. Stevenson's Appendix, pp. 322, 323, 324, 391, and p. 153 of this volume.

Under the head of "The Grange," the Kitchener accounts for moneys received from the tithe corn and hay of Abingdon, Schupene, and the Rye, from the corn of Sandford (a rectory belonging to the abbey), from the Croft (Crofta), from herbage, and from the tithe of fifteen acres next Caldecote.

Rents of assize and other sums, particulars of which are stated, were derived from Schupene, Caldecote, Whysle, and Wenekefelde, and from the Abbot's manors, the names of which are given. The grooms (garciones) of the Kitchener are mentioned. Large numbers of hens came in under the name of "churscett," or church-scot; but no money was received for them, as they were all "expended," that is, used in the monks' own kitchen.[a] Geese also formed part of the receipts, being all consumed. Oats and hogs were sold in some places. The fines and perquisites of certain courts yielded rather large sums.

On the other hand, the Kitchener's expenses comprised rents and other payments for tenements, some to other officers of the abbey. 40s was due to the Castle of Windsor for ward, and 13s 4d to "the Exchequer of Oxford,"[b] being outgoings from tenements of the abbey. But the principal expenses were for the kitchen, for wine, ale, and cheese, for beef, pork, mutton, and veal, for pigs, eggs, eels, salmon, and various kinds of fresh and salt fish, with oysters; the total amounting to the large sum of $179^{l}\ 16^{s}\ 0\frac{1}{2}^{d}$. The monks evidently lived in a liberal fashion, and had every variety of food.[a] Poultry is not here mentioned, because hens had been already accounted for. Other sums were paid for flour, saffron, mace, garlick, onions, sauce, pepper, lard, oil, figs, raisins, almonds, salt, &c. The small sum of 4^{s} defrayed the Kitchener's expenses "to Winchester" and back.

[a] Professor Vinogradoff, in his Villainage in England, p. 295, writes as follows: "The church had also an ancient claim on the faithful; the church-scot of Saxon times often occurs in the feudal age under the name of churiset or cheriset. It is mostly paid in kind, but may be found occasionally as a money-rent."

[b] Many estates all over the kingdom had to pay "castle-guard rents" to neighbouring castles, sometimes even after the castles had been destroyed or had fallen into decay. The rent due to "the King's Exchequer in Oxford" is mentioned in Mr. Stevenson's Appendix, p. 332. In 29-30 Henry VIII. it was payable to "the bailiffs of the town of Oxford" for tenements in Abingdon, as "landgable rent."

From this office payments were due to the Socii "in the autumn," to the Lignar, to the Keeper of the Work, to the chaplains of several persons, whose obits were probably kept in the abbey, and to "a new chaplain."

Tenths were paid in the counties of Berks and Oxford, and "for the contribution of the Cardinals" in the same counties. $8^{s}\ 4^{d}$ was distributed to the poor "for Abbot Nicholas," probably in linen cloth, as before. It should be remarked that the tenths were levied on each office separately, and not on the abbey as a whole, though the total may have been paid to the royal collector in one sum.

Dishes, plates, vessels, and utensils had to be provided by the Kitchener. Candles cost $8^{s}\ 3^{d}$. Oblations "against Christmas" came to $8^{s}\ 9^{d}$. The cooks of the Kitchen received $7^{s}\ 4^{d}$ "for the principal feasts." On the "feast of Saint Thomas" the Kitchener and his Socius took 3^{s}. The large sum of 103^{s} went in "autumn expenses," for the autumnal feasts so frequently referred to in these rolls. Were the monks allowed to go out to join in the harvest merry-makings? Speaking of the great feast days at Bicester, Mr. Blomfield says that "in the afternoons the monks and their visitors often joined the villagers in their sports." But the Augustinian rule was not so strict as the Benedictine.

[a] The number of courses at dinner is not specified. The Ramsey accounts in one place mention "the third dish." Perhaps this was the usual number. At a much earlier date the monks of Saint Swithin complained to King Henry II. that the Bishop of Winchester had reduced the number of their dishes to ten, but the King replied that he had only three himself, and ordered the Bishop to reduce the monks' dishes to that number. Giraldus Cambrensis, who tells this story, adds that he had in his own time counted sixteen courses at a monastic repast. (Giraldus, De rebus a se gestis, lib. ii., cap. 5.)

There were other payments for repairs of houses, for the carts, horses, and hogs, and for cleansing the fishpond. Then follow the stipends of the bailiff and other servants, and allowances for decayed rents, for holding a court, for hidage, &c. After some further expenses for various necessary articles, the total is cast at 268^{l} 1^{s} 5¾^{d}, leaving a balance of 60^{l} 17^{s} 9¼^{d} in favour of the Kitchener.

The Chamberlain was another principal officer, whose chief duty it was to provide for the clothing and shoeing of the community,[a] and who accordingly had under his superintendence the tailor, the shoemaker, and the lavender or launderer.[b] His office was termed "the Chamber."

The first account of this office is dated 1417-1418. The receipts consist almost entirely of rents from manors, rectories, lands, tenements, and portions, which need not be fully described here. 30^{s} was due from the Rector of Tadmertone for Maundy. 15^{s} 3^{d} was received from the Abbot for a servant in the tailory (sartaria).[c] The total receipts for the year were 191^{l} 5^{s} 0¾d. Out of this a "surplusage" or deficit of the preceding year had to be made good. The Chamberlain had to pay several sums to the Treasurers of the Convent for "customs," for the "absence of brethren," and for the autumnal feasts. Part of the rents received by [a] See Mr. Stevenson's Appendix, p. 384. The Chamberlain occasionally went to the fair at Winchcomb (300, 326). The Abbot had a chamberlain of his own.

[b] The shoes were greased with hog's fat thrice in the course of the year (MS. Cott. Claud. C. IX. f. 178b). At Ramsey there were two masters in the sartaria, and three servants in the laundry. The "lotrix ecclesiæ" and her servant, and the "lotrix Refectorii" are also mentioned. (Monasticon, ii. 549.) In the Ministers' Accounts of Ramsey these laundresses are described as "ij lotrices Conventus," and "lotrix manutergiorum."

[c] "In stipendijs sissoris et sutoris de sartrino, ix s. ix d. ob." (Ramsey Accounts.)

him were "repaid," or rather paid over, to the Kitchener, the Almoner, the Treasurers of the Convent, the Cellarer, the Refectorer, and others. The payment to the Treasurers out of a certain tenement was to be made for a term of thirty years only, which had nearly expired. There were large defaults of rents and tenants' works, deductions for the repairs of houses, costs of the sheep, of the meadows at Welford, and for the expenses there of the Lord Abbot, the Chamberlain, and other brethren, who evidently made Welford a favourite resort.[a]

The "Expenses in the Convent" are set out under a separate heading. Money payments or liveries "for spices" on the feast of the Nativity of the B. V. Mary, were made to the Abbot, the Prior, the Subprior, the Third Prior, 21 priests, and 10 non-sacerdotes. Here we obtain a statement of the numerical composition of the monastery, which varied slightly from time to time; and it is also stated that one of the monks died in that year, his name, as well as that of a "newly professed," being given. Other similar payments were made to the Abbot and Convent at the "terms" or feasts of St. Michael, St. Thomas the Apostle, the Annunciation, and St. John the Baptist, an extra sum being given to the three Priors "of bounty." The Chamberlain had a special allowance for "spices" by reason of his office, and four novices likewise received money for spices. It is clear that the monks received money, and not money's worth; so it may be that they had the option of spending it or not spending it as they pleased, and if any of them were of a saving disposition they would be able to lay up some amount of "treasure on earth." Though this hardly accords with the primitive intention of

[a] "The Chamberlain has in his hand the town of Welford and the town of Chieveley, with the hamlets appertaining." He also received certain "customs" from the Abbot. (Chronicle of Abingdon, ed. Stevenson, ii., 299.) In like manner the Chamberlain of Ramsey had the manor of Lawshall, to which he sometimes went in person, and sometimes sent his groom and other servants, to levy moneys. (Ministers' Accounts.)

monachism, it need hardly excite surprise, for there is no doubt that the original rules had become greatly relaxed.[a]

Under the same heading are various other payments, including small sums to the tailor and the lavender for thread; expenses for "the great Mass," O Rex gentium, &c.[b] The Chamberlain had a Subchamberlain and a Socius. He paid moneys to the deacons and novices, and to the students at Oxford. 6s was distributed to the poor on the obit of Abbot Hugh, and 30s was spent on Maundy Thursday. Towards the Abbot's caprioli 2s was paid, the other offices likewise contributing under this head. Particulars are given as to the clothing of the monks. Oil in the Dormitory or Dorter cost 36s 8d. It appears that the Abbot sent his servants, if he did not attend himself, to the installation of the Bishop of Salisbury.[c]

Under another heading the Chamberlain claims deductions for expenses of visitors, a visit to Welford, horse-shoeing, masons, carpenters, the garden, the ward of Windsor Castle (for the manor of Bradeley), wine bought on "the day of the account," tenths paid to the King for his official possessions in Berkshire and Oxfordshire, his contribution to the General Chapter, fuel, torches,

[a] "Moneys paid to the Abbot and monks" are alluded to by Mr. Bruce. The Canons of Burcester likewise received money to provide themselves with clothes. (Blomfield's History, p. 117.)

[b] The Oleries, or Anthems in Advent beginning with O, are frequently referred to in these accounts and in those of Ramsey Abbey. In the latter they are described somewhat differently, as the following examples will show :—

In O Abbatis, iij s. iiij d. In O Camerarij, &c. In expensis Abbatis et Prioris ad O, cum exennijs ad Natale et Pascha, xix s. In seruisia ad le O Elemosinarij et pro distribucione, xx s.; et pro tercio ferculo, xiij s. iiij d. In expensis ad le O Camerarij cum ceruicia, pisce, speciebus, et amigdalis, lj s. ijd. (Ministers' Accounts, Public Record Office.)

The late Archdeacon Hale gives other variations in the use of the "O" in his Introduction to the Register of Worcester Priory, and explains that "they relate to the pittances or additions to the ordinary diet of the monastery made on festival days" in Advent. (Camden Society.)

[c] John Chaundeler, elected 15 Nov. 1417.

&c. The Chamberlain went to London apparently to obtain legal advice touching certain rents. Lastly, the stipends of his servants are set out; they were the tailor, the lavender, the shoemaker, the groom or page, the clerk of the account, and the yeoman or valet. Part of the expenses in some cases were shared by the Chamberlain with other officers. The total was 206l. 6s 8$\frac{1}{8}$d; "and so more expended than received, 15l 1s 7$\frac{1}{2}$d."[a]

Just before the date of this account, in 1416, some public-spirited inhabitants of Abingdon began to build the two bridges of Burford and Culham. On their completion, the high road from London to Gloucester was diverted through the town of Abingdon, which thus acquired much additional traffic, and became of great consequence; but there is no reference to those bridges in the rolls before us. It has indeed been particularly remarked that "neither the Abbot nor any of the monks appear to have distinguished themselves as contributors." The chief bearer of the expense was the locally-famous merchant, Geoffrey Barbour, who died soon afterwards.[b] Barbour's tenement is referred to in the account next to be mentioned.

There is only one other account of the Chamberlain, eleven years later, for the year 1428–1429. Ralph de Hamme, the previous Chamberlain, had become Abbot, and was succeeded in the office by Thomas de Salford, who is said to have resigned the office of Abbot in 1427.[c] Here he begins with a balance in hand, but many of the rents formerly belonging to this office were received this year by the Abbot's receiver and surveyor of the lordship of Welford, who paid the money over to the Chamberlain. It should be noticed that two monks successively held the office of Chamberlain this year, and each of them renders his portion of the yearly account in the same roll. The receipts for the year came to 151^{l} 17^{s} 1¼^{d}, showing a diminution, which is partly accounted for by the fact that the Abbot's receiver did not pay over his gross receipts, but made deductions for outgoings. Repayments of rent and expenses in the Convent are specified as before. The number of priests had increased to 27, and that of non-sacerdotes had decreased to five. Two monks had "receded," one to Colne. Two new priests are named. 3^{s} 4^{d} was paid for "our medicines"; 12^{d} to the keeper of "the red gate"; 3^{s} 2^{d} for "a torch bought against Christmas"; 3^{s} 6^{d} "to our servants riding with us to Welford on three occasions, and bringing trouts to Abingdon"; 7^{s} for six cushions of tapestry-work bought for the manor of Welford; 16^{s} 10^{d} to the Archbishop of Canterbury for a subsidy granted to the prelates, doctors, and clerks crossing over to the general Council of Sienna; 15^{d} to "the same Lord" for another subsidy granted for the defence of the English Church; 8^{s} 6^{d} to the same for the expenses of the proctors of the clergy in the last Convocation; and 13½^{d} to the Bishop of Lincoln for his expenses in his visitation this year, for the church of Tademerton.

[a] See also Mr. Bruce's remarks on this account, p. 10.

[b] Lyson's Magna Britannia, vol. i. part ii. p. 220; Brayley and Britton, Berkshire, 162.

[c] It is stated that a pension was given to Salford. A previous Abbot, John Dorset, had resigned in 1422, and in 1425 had a licence to study for three years in either of the Universities of England. (Reg. Chaundeler, Salisbury, quoted in the the Monasticon.)

Other sums are entered as being due to the Bishop of Lincoln, but were disallowed, because they had not been paid. All the payments to the Archbishop and the Bishop were made at a certain rate assessed upon the recognised taxation of the church (of Pope Nicholas IV.). The carriage of eight cart-loads of planks, joists, and boards from Welford, for mending the laundry, cost 24^{s}; it was evidently a building of goodly proportions. 3000 tiles with laths and nails were bought at Netelbed for roofing the office of the Cameraria. A key for the door of the garden cost 3^{d}. 20^{d} was paid to Matilda Neell of Welford as "rewards" for preparing dinner "at our arrival;" the plural indicating that she received sums from or for each of the visitors. 4^{d} was spent in wine bought on the eve of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, no doubt for the audit. The total expenses were 139^{l} 0^{s} 8^{d}. Thus the Chamberlain wound up the year with a balance in hand. At the end of the account is an inventory of the furniture in the Hospice, or guest-house, and in the laundry. In the former there was "one counting-board in the Exchequer." In the latter were "six brass basons for washing feet and for Maundy," and four towels of linen cloth for Maundy.[a]

Next in importance to the Chamberlain, in respect of the amount passing through his hands, was the Lignar. This officer is styled "the Woodreeve" by Mr. Bruce, and "the Woodward" by Mr. Stevenson in his edition of the Abingdon Chronicle,[b] but he does not appear to have had the custody of any woods, though a small portion of his receipts was derived from "woodsilver." The other well-known term, "woodman," would likewise be a bad rendering of lignarius, as it is usually applied to a man who is employed in felling and lopping trees. This officer's chief occupation appears to have been the provision of fuel by purchase. I have therefore had to coin a word—the Lignar—out of the Latin term Lignarius, as in the case of "Obedientiars."

The Lignar's receipts in 1355-1356 were chiefly derived from "portions," and other moneys due from his fellow-officers, and from corn and wool sold at Drayton and Colnham. The sum total was 117^{l} 15^{s} 2^{d}. Out of this he had to make payments to the Cellarer and Refectorer, and to the deacons and novices. He had to pay his share of the oblations "against Christmas," for "the

[a] See the Register of Worcester Priory, p. xciii. Two years after the date of this account, in 1431, there was an insurrection against the clergy, of which William Mandeville, bailiff of Abingdon, was one of the ringleaders. He was seized by the Duke of Gloucester, and executed. (Lysons, Berkshire, p. 220.)

[b] Mr. Stevenson quotes a reference to the lignarium, or woodhouse, where the fuel was stored, and which would be under the supervision of the Lignar. There were three "lignarii" in Ramsey Abbey, but they were not obedientiars. One of them was "in the hall," the other two "in the kitchen." Only the first was permitted to dine in the hall, along with the master-porter and the two dispensers. (Monasticon, ii. 549.)

great Mass," for wine and ale sent to the Abbot and Prior, for the Abbot's caprioli, &c. His own cowl and shoeing cost 10^s 6^d. Great firewood or billets cost 7^l 12^s $9\frac{1}{2}^d$; underwood or faggots, 104^s $6\frac{1}{4}^d$; straw, 79^s $1\frac{1}{2}^d$; charcoal, 30^s. There were various farming and other expenses, including the costs of a new sheepfold. 4^s was paid for medicine for the horses, and 9^s 2^d was given to divers purveyors of the King and Queen. Like other officers, the Lignar had to pay his quota to the King's fifteenth. On the dorse of the roll there is a grange account, showing the quantities of grain received, and how it was disposed of. Part was consumed in "liveries" to servants, part was used for seed, and part was sold, no doubt, to outsiders, as the abbey lands grew much more corn than was required for the sustenance of its household.

The Sacristan was the next important officer. First of all, he received 9^l 4^s $4\frac{3}{4}^d$ by allowance of the Convent. Many rents, pensions, portions, and tithes were assigned to this office, and full particulars of them are set out, which include sums received from the rectories of St. Martin's and St. Aldate's in Oxford. "Of the Lignar for tithes in Milton and Charney, nothing, because they are assigned to the Lignar's office by a certain provision (providencia)." The oblations are also specified minutely. The rectory of Mercham appears to have been bodily assigned to this office. Altogether the receipts amounted to 74^l 1^s $1\frac{3}{4}^d$.

As usual there are repayments of rents to fellow obedientiars and others. Then follow the Sacristan's peculiar "expenses in the Church." 486lb. of wax were bought at the cost of 12^l 11^s. Wine for masses and liveries came to 42^s; oil, 75^s 8^d; with candles, tallow, lamps, tapers, torches and wick. 10^s yearly was paid to William Chaundler to superintend the making of tapers and candles. 20^d was spent for mending the clapper of a bell; 19^d in cords for the bells; 8^d in a bawdrick for a bell; and 17^s $3\frac{1}{2}^d$ for ringing the bells on feast days. This ringing was done by the "clerks," who also received stipends amounting to 17^{s} 7^{d} yearly, besides allowances for certain services.[a]

Then follow "expenses in the Convent." The Sacristan had to pay to the Treasurers of the Convent "of custom" 10^{l} 18^{s} 4^{d}, with other sums. "In the oblation of the Lord Abbot, Prior, and Convent this year, 6^{l} 6^{s} 8^{d}." Money was paid for spices for the three Priors, the Sacristan, and the Socii of the church; and spices and confections were provided for the Sacristan and for guests. Sundry payments occur of a similar nature to those described in other offices. 9^{s} 6^{d} was distributed to the poor on the day of Relics; 8^{s} 8^{d} being paid in wine for the Convent on the same day.

"Necessary expenses" included 3^{s} for "the boots of the Knights." The stipend of the butler was 13^{s} 4^{d}. 53^{s} 4^{d} was expended for the Hospice and visitors. The outgoings at Mercham are specified. Finally there are expenses for work done in "the Hall and Chamber" by carpenters, masons, and others; and gloves cost 20^{d}. The total expenses amounted to 82^{l} 15^{s} 3$\frac{3}{4}$^{d}, besides 17^{s} 11$\frac{1}{4}$^{d} for a fourth part of a tenth. Thus they exceeded the receipts by 8^{l} 14^{s} 2^{d}. This account is followed by a grange account of Mercham, and lists of debtors and creditors. The men of Hanney were in debt for Peter's pence. The great size of the Easter taper is shown by the fact that 300lb. of it remained.[b]

We may now turn to the accounts of "the Warden of the Office of Trinity of the Monastery of Abingdon," who received the rents of various lands and tenements, some of which had been acquired by Abbots Roger de Thame and Peter de Hanney, and assigned to this office. Three pence yearly were due to the

[a] The number of the bells is not stated. In the tower at Burcester there were at first three, and afterwards four bells. (Mr. Blomfield's History, p. 108.) There was a guild for ringing the bells of Westminster Abbey. (Patent Roll, 39 Henry III., m. 12.)

[b] Several accounts of the Sacristan of Burcester are abstracted in Mr. Blomfield's History. There are also Sacristan's accounts of Coldingham Priory.

Warden from the Master of the Scholars of Abingdon; and larger sums were payable by the Sacristan, the Almoner, and the Treasurers of the Convent. 4^s was received from the Abbot for four gaudies. Gifts by John Wythegynmulle and Matilda his wife, and by John Yonge, of Radley, are referred to. The Warden's total receipts for the year 1414-15 amounted to 38^l 15^s.

On the other side there are payments to the Kitchener for divers tenements in Abingdon, to the Cellarer, and to the Almoner. 6^s 8^d was also paid to the last-named "for a certain place enclosed within the new Hospice," or inn, which is referred to in several other places. A yearly payment was due to the Prior of Pohgle (or Powgheley), for Chyld's tenement. But the greater portion of the Warden's expenses was for "the Chapel," and included moneys paid to the Clerks of the Church[a] for the obit of Abbot John, and to celebrants for the souls of the first two of the benefactors above mentioned. 6^l 13^s 4^d was paid to the Treasurers of the Convent towards the New Work, under a new ordinance. The repairs of the tenements belonging to this office, and of the new inn, absorbed about 6^l; the whole of the expenses slightly exceeding the receipts.

There are two later accounts of the Trinity Warden, in 1436-1437 and in 1448-1449. In the latter year the office was held by Ralph Hamme, the Prior. They both give inventories of the stores belonging to the office.[b]

The Gardener's accounts show receipts coming to about 20^l a year. There are four accounts of this office, which was combined with that of the Pittancer in the earliest of them. Moneys were received from and paid to other officers as usual, including receipts from the Keeper of the Work and the Precentor for their gardens. Several officers had separate gardens of their own within the abbey walls, in addition to the large garden of the abbey. The Hundred Court of Hornmere seems to have belonged to the Abbey, as its profits were divided between several offices. The Gardener, like others of his fellow obedientiars, had a famulus of his own, and employed other servants and workmen. This famulus was paid with the money received from the Bailiff of the Hundred.[a] 7s 11½d was spent on the vines and alleys.

In the second account of this officer it is stated that the "perquisites of the courts of the Lordship of the Gardener" had been demised to the Kitchener at farm.[b] The abbey garden appears to have contained a fishpond, as the Gardener derived 12s 8d from fish sold.[c] 6s accrued from "busca et fasciculis vinearum"—evidently the prunings of the vines;[d] 13s 4d from wine (made in the abbey?); 20s 0½d from grapes; 2s from verjuice; 4d from vines; 13s 4d from cider sold "by estimation"; and 32s 6½d from fruits sold, namely, apples, pears, and nuts.[e] 71s 1d was received from barley, pulse, and straw sold; part of the straw not being accounted for because it had been "expended in thatching the houses."

Various payments were made by the Gardener to the Abbot, Prior, and other officers, of a similar nature to those mentioned in other accounts. 2s was paid to "our chaplain." Several sums are charged for the table, stipends, and "tunics" of the servants, besides occasional gifts; probably they were the servants who laboured in the Garden.[f] The following is a more descriptive entry than usual: "In expenses made for sending the yearly gifts to O Radix, 16d." Medicine cost 5s. The great moat round the abbey was cleansed at the expense of 20s 10½d. Sundry items refer to moneys spent "in fishing" and in nets.[a] No officer could obtain anything belonging to another office without paying for it; and so the Gardener had to disburse 8d for an ash tree standing in the Hostilary, or on land belonging to it.[b]

[b] A later account has: "To the Kitchener for excusing our tenants upon Sterte at the day of frankpledge, 3s 4d."

[c] There were several ponds within the walls of the Priory of Burcester; see Mr. Blomfield's plan.

The gathering of grapes and the vintage cost 4s 4d, and the propping of the vines 4s 6d. The vines were apparently cultivated in the Italian manner,[c] but their culture was clearly neither extensive nor very profitable. It is not stated how many servants were employed here, but we know that in the vineyard at Ramsey there were a master and six servants. Other expenses were incurred in gathering the fruit and nuts, and in making cider. On striking a balance, the Gardener shows a large excess of expenditure; and though there were many "debtors" to the office, of whom the Abbot was the chief, yet he owed large sums to the Treasurers of the Convent, the Pittancer, and others.

"The Issues of the Grange of the Garden," and "Stock in the office of the Gardener," are set out under separate headings. One of two brass pots had been taken from a tenant as a distress for or in lieu of rent.

The two later accounts of the Gardener are very similar to those just described. The Gardener had a Socius, who was paid by other officers. Their cowls and shoes for the year cost 2s; "and it is assigned to the New Work in the Nave of the Church on the north side." 40s was paid "to Thomas Abendon, the second scholar, for the corrody of John Otour and his wife, for bread and ale." In the year 1412 there was a bad fruit season, and nothing was received for grapes, "because they remain in the Infirmary for making verjuice thereof"; so the Gardener had to buy figs at London and "in the town" of Abingdon, for the Convent, especially in Lent and Advent.

The last account of the Gardener mentions many gardens belonging to tenements, one being next to St. Nicholas Church, the rector of which paid 1^{d} yearly "for a chimney standing on the Lord's soil, so demised by indenture for a term of years." The peculiar profits of the office are entered under the head of ".Farm of the Garden and the Croft," and include 10^{s} 7½^{d} received from the fishing of the water there. As no receipts from vines or grapes occur, it is probable that vine-culture had been abandoned.[a] 6^{s} 8^{d} was received from Richard Evesham [a tenant?] "for a new garden made on the west side of our hospice." The following entries also deserve notice: "Paid to the Keeper of Bayworth for the obit of Abbots Roger and Peter, for Monkcroft, 13^{s} 4^{d}; and paid to the Kitchener for the tithe of the same croft, 3^{s} 4^{d}." "In the stipend of a carpenter hired to make and amend the great Gate next the Church of St. Nicholas, with boards and nails for the same, 22^{d}." Divers repairs "within our hospice" cost 4^{s} 5^{d}. This hospice appears to have been the Gardener's residence. "In weals bought for taking fish in the moat of the Convent, 4^{s} 10^{d}," with other charges for keeping fish. The Gardener's total receipts and expenses had gradually decreased, till they at last amounted to about twelve pounds yearly.

The Pittancer's accounts are very brief.[b] He received in Abingdon and elsewhere pensions from six churches, and small sums from wood, fruit, and hay, the total coming to 17^{l} 19^{s} 1^{d}. Out of this sum he paid a small debt; "in signatione" of the

[a] The Vineyard, however, continued to be mentioned as a locality in other accounts. In the Monasticon it is stated that "north of the Abbey is a place still retaining the name of the Vineyard" (i. 510).

[b] His first account is dated 1322-3. This is the only roll which has survived the "destruction" of the abbey, in 1327, by unruly persons of Oxford and Abingdon, of whom twelve were hanged and sixty more condemned. (Monasticon, i. 508; Addit. MSS. Brit. Mus., 28,666, f. 154; Mr. H. C. Maxwell Lyte's History of the University of Oxford, p. 132.)

Prior and Convent yearly, 75s 3d; and for certain customs, which are specified, 74s 10½d. There are sundry payments to persons named, being special pittances to members of the Convent; to the Infirmarer and the servants of the Infirmary; and for the signatio of the novices before Easter, after Easter, and "the third time." The Pittancer had a garcio and servientes under him. 6s 2d was paid for the Prior, who had been twice ill in the year, some of the novices having likewise been unwell; and 18d was paid to Master Henry, physician of the Infirmary. Fish was bought for stocking the fishpond at the cost of 9s 6d, and 2s 2d was spent in "feeding the fish." In the signatio of the Pittancer and the Infirmarer the former disbursed 2s 6d. Thus the expenses slightly exceeded the receipts.

There is only one other account of the Pittancer, in the year 1369-70, when the office was held jointly with that of Gardener. It appears to have been part of the duties of both officers to look after the fishpond and fishing. This year the Pittancer spent 3s in weals and pots for catching fish, and 15s 9d "about the moat." Besides some large pittances to sick monks, 9s 1d was expended "in the recreation of the elders." 32s 11d was laid out "about the gates and bridges in the Pittancery," that is, in lands belonging to the office,[a] and small sums in "pots for service," and in platters for meats and porridge. Napronys (napkins) for the workmen's table cost 20d. In a few cases we find one office relieving another; and so here 79s 7d was transferred from the Pittancery to the Gardenery (pp. 17, 19). The receipts of the former had more than doubled, while those of the latter had a chronic tendency to decrease. The Pittancer was also able to get his discharge from an old debt of 15l for three years' pension from the church of Boxor, with which he had probably been charged in previous accounts, but which he had been unable to obtain.

[a] A parcel of land and marsh called "the Pitensarie" is mentioned in the letters patent of 1585 (p. 167).

The Infirmarer's accounts are very brief, and deal with small amounts of money; so it may be inferred that the monks as a rule enjoyed very good health, though there were occasional periods of general sickness. Their "doctor's bills" were, as such documents ought to be in all well-regulated households, small in comparison with their "provision bills." It does not appear that the Infirmary was used as a public hospital; only sick monks were admitted.[a] Part of the Infirmarer's receipts were derived from rents in the town and suburb of Oxford, in Abingdon, and other places, part from tithes, and part from the Treasurers of the Convent (pp. 3, 4). Certain sums were paid for monks who had doubtless been unwell, although the fact is not stated; and there are a few slight indications of the method of their treatment. In gathering herbs he spent 7^d; for surgery (? bleeding), 8^s 10^d; for making waters, 12^d; for cummin and liquory-stick, 8^d; for aniseed, $4\frac{1}{2}^d$. 8lb. of sugar cost the large sum of 10^s 8^d. 16^d was given to the esquires and grooms.[b]

The qualities required in the Infirmarer of Abingdon are set out in the treatise on the Obedientiars, and are quoted by Archdeacon Hale in the introduction to the Worcester Register.[c]

The second Infirmarer's account is dated between the two great pestilences of 1349 and 1361-2, and shows a decrease in the amount actually spent in the relief of sickness, though there is an increase in the incidental expenses. It includes among the receipts 6^s 8^d from the Treasurers of the Convent "for firewood for le

[a] There were two hospitals, in the old sense of the word, in Abingdon, one of St. Helen, founded in the reign of Henry V., by Geoffrey Barbar and John de St. Helen, for thirteen poor women; the other, called St. John's, founded by one of the Abbots, for six poor people. A payment to the latter was made by the Lignar in 1355-6. (Lysons, Berkshire, p. 229.)

[b] The esquires are seldom mentioned. A Glastonbury cartulary mentions the esquires of that abbey, who each had a livery, some of them being married. (Prof. Vinogradoff's Villainage, p. 322.)

Mongomery";[a] and 26s "received yearly from ten gallons of conventual ale by the week for the stipends of the servants of the Infirmary," who, like more modern nurses, appear to have had great faith in strong liquors. Part of one of the Infirmarer's tenements was occupied by the chaplain and proctors of the chantry of St. Mary in the church of St. Ellen. Suit had to be done by the Infirmarer for another of his tenements at the Guildhall of Oxford. His expenses on the feast of St. Æthelwold came to 6s 8d.[b] The improvement of a chamber in the Infirmary, by making a chimney and putting a tester to the bed, with aumbries or cupboards and other necessaries, cost 28s 8½d. "The woodhouse" is mentioned. Did this woodhouse belong to the Infirmary, or to the whole Abbey? Possibly it was the house which the Lignar had to superintend. The stipends of the laundress, claviger, and cook were small. 2s was paid to "our chaplain"; 2s for "our oblation" in the chapel of Saint Edmund; and 5s 0½d for wax tapers in the Chapel, each weighing one pound.

This is followed by a separate account for medicines, which is very interesting, because it indicates what drugs were then used in the hospital of a monastery. The more difficult of the terms employed are explained in the Glossary.[c]

Master Thomas, the physician, his horse and his servant, and Master William and his horse, are mentioned. It would appear from this and other references (pp. 4 and 5) that these physicians resided at a distance from the monastery, probably at Oxford,

[a] This is referred to again on p. 13.

[b] The reason for observing this feast is obvious. King Alfred took the town of Abingdon from the monks, but it was restored to them by his grandson Eadred, who employed St. Æthelwold to superintend the new foundation, which was completed in the reign of Eadgar. (Monasticon, i. 505.) Æthelwold was Abbot of Abingdon in 954, and afterwards Bishop of Winchester. (Stevenson, ii. 253, and Index.)

and were called in only when occasion demanded. Here again we meet with the gathering of herbs, and the making of waters, oils, and ointments. Wine was used for both potions and lotions.

There are no fewer than six accounts of the two Wardens of the Chapel of Saint Edmund. As the monastery was of pre-Norman foundation, it might naturally have been supposed that this saint was Edmund, King of the East Angles, who was killed by the Danes in 870, and whose "day" was duly observed in the abbey; but in a cartulary of Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, who was Earl from 1272 to 1300,[a] we find that he was the founder of this Chapel, and that he dedicated it to St. Edmund of Abingdon, Treasurer and Prebendary of Salisbury, and afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury from 1234 to 1240. The following is a summary of the obligation given by the Abbot for its maintenance :—

"Charter of Richard, Abbot of Abendon, and the Convent there. Whereas Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, who has always been a kind and bounteous defender and protector to us, our church, and house, by the motion of Divine charity, has with our consent founded a Chapel in our estate in the vill of Abendon, in the parish of St. Ellen,[b] in which church we have the right of patron and rector, in a certain place and area containing in length 88 feet, and in breadth 60 feet, where the blessed confessor, Edmund of Pontigny,[c] is known to have been born, to the praise of God and of the said Saint, and to the evident advantage of our church and house, ordaining that two priests shall every day celebrate divine offices therein for ever: we promise to find at our own charges the same two priests, religious and secular, at our pleasure, to celebrate for the souls of the Earl aforesaid and his ancestors; and also we oblige ourselves to maintain the said Chapel, area, and chantry, subjecting ourselves to the compulsion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Salisbury, and the Archdeacon of Berks, and also to the royal power in this respect. Dated at Abendon, 7 kal. Jul. 1288."

The Annals of Worcester allege that in 1289 miracles took place in the Chapel of Abindone, which Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, had built in the preceding year.[a]

The greater portion of the revenues of this Chapel was derived from oblations on the altar; another large portion from the rents of tenements in several streets of Abingdon; 8d. from the box before the cross; and 6d. from herbage in the cemetery.[b] Like other officers, the two Wardens had to pay "customs" to the Treasurers of the Convent, besides "collation" on St. Edmund's Day; and to defray or help to defray the oblations of the Convent, namely, the Prior, the Subprior, the third Prior, and 29 Socii. There were sundry expenses for the Chapel, which was strewn with straw.[c] Mending the bells cost 6d. Expenses were incurred on the day of St. Edmund,[d] the day of Dedication of the Chapel, and the day of the Translation of St. Edmund. The celebrants on the three feasts received 12d. The Chaplain and the Clerk are [a] Annales Monastici, ed. Dr. Luard, iv. 499. There had been a confederation between the Convent of Abingdon and the Priory of Worcester in 1253; ib. 442.

[b] This seems to have belonged to the Chapel, but the Abbey cemetery was more famous. The Monasticon, quoting Leland, says: "In old times many of the villages about Abingdon had but chapels of ease, and Abingdon Abbey was their mother church, and there they buried." It is a pity there are no vicar's accounts for Abingdon and other places as there are for Burcester, serving in some sort as parish registers. The cemetery of the Priory was shaded by ash-trees.

[c] Rushes were used in later years.

[d] This day is in one place only described as "the feast of the Deposition of St. Edmund the Confessor," i.e., 16th November. The Translation seems to have been on the 9th June. (Nicolas's Chronology, p. 145.) There has been some confusion as to the festivals of the two St. Edmunds, but the observance at Abingdon is of great authority, and shows that the Archbishop had a Translation as well as the King.

mentioned in several places; 4d. was paid to the laundress for washing vestments.

Most of the tenements belonging to the Chapel had been bequeathed by one John Porter, for the souls of whom and his wife the chaplain performed daily offices. In the later accounts the rents of the tenements steadily increased, while the receipts from oblations gradually decreased to a very small sum.

In 1422-3 the porch of the Chapel of St. Edmund, having fallen into decay, was repaired by a plumber, and a stone wall was made between the cemetery and a certain tenement. A curious inventory is given of the stores remaining in the Chapel, the Hall, the Pantry and Butlery, the upper Chamber, the Kitchen, and the Dormitory.[a]

In the same account of the Chapel Wardens it appears that their contribution to the Treasurers of the Convent "for customs" had been increased from 27^{s} to 40^{s}, to be derived from a certain tenement, or rather manor-house (p. 138), and to be laid up in a new chest till 100^{l} should have been amassed, under a new ordinance. At a much later date, 1466-7, it is stated that they had ceased to make any payment to the Treasurers "towards the new Work of custom."

In 1469-1470 repairs were done to the Chapel and its belfry. The bequeathed tenements in these later years also required considerable repair, and some of them became vacant. In consequence of the heavy charges on this office, it became greatly in debt, but the last account shows that the annual deficit had been reduced from 21^{l} 10^{s} 9½^{d} to 44^{s}, though in the current year it once more increased.

There is only one account of the Refectorer, and that is very brief. The receipts were largely in excess of the expenses. 12^{d} was paid to the students of Oxford on St. Edmund's day.

[a] See a similar inventory on pp. 134, 135.

Rushes were used for the floor of the Refectory, and towels and tankards were bought. On the dorse there is an ample inventory of the "store of masers" remaining in the custody of several officers. Under this head, the silver and silver-gilt plate, masers, bowls, cups, spoons and "pieces" are minutely described, with napkins, "savernaprons," candelabra, pewter-pots, tin basins, benches, chests, tankards, &c. Special spoons were kept for the medicines.[a]

The solitary Common Chest account is incomplete, and consists of expenses only. A plumber had been hired to do repairs about the Church and the Cloister. Freestone was brought from the quarry at Teynton for the south aisle of the Church, and timber from Hawkerygge for the same. A goldsmith was employed to mend a silver-gilt ewer. The lead for the aisle cost 20^{l} 12^{s} 6^{d}. Master Hacker had been sent to divers places to search for youths to undergo the tonsure. Gifts were made to certain outside scholars and monks. Two habits were bought on the tonsure of certain monks at the cost of 20^{s}, and silk for the same cost 20^{d}. White tunics and other necessaries for the six youths last shaved came to 10^{l}. Rewards were given to the scholars of Oxford and divers men of the town (of Abingdon) for defending the Abbot in the fields of Drayton Wike, near Abingdon, perhaps within sight of the abbey towers, while gathering a certain "portion." This looks as if the Abbot had to resort to physical force on one occasion in order to levy his tithes, and that the "scholars" were not always engrossed in study. One would like to know whether the number of the latter was limited to the two supported by the abbey, or whether these two brought recruits from the university.

This curious entry suggests an animated picture to the mind's eye: the Abbot, with some of his monks and servants, and the contingent of Oxonian undergraduates, accompanied by the harvest wagon of the abbey, on the one side, and the refractory villagers armed with their implements of husbandry on the other side. There has apparently been no opposition to the entrance of the monastic forces at the gates of the common fields, but while the Abbot, under the protection of his escort, proceeds through the furlongs and acres, pointing out every tenth sheaf to his servants, who seize and transfer it to the wagon, the villagers are resisting the proceedings, as far as they are able, at every step, which leads to frequent encounters between the more violent of either party.

[a] See Mr. Bruce's remarks on this inventory, p. 8. The duties of this officer are referred to in the introduction to the Register of Worcester Priory, p. lxxxviii. As to the Worcester Refectorer's revenues, see p. 99a of the Register.

Other expenses were incurred for a cantor, and for two singing boys, the latter having been "delivered" by the Abbot of Glastonbury on a letter from the Duke of Gloucester, to whose secretary rewards were given.

Having now passed in review all the extant accounts of the obedientiars, we may briefly summarise the results, bearing in mind that we have no accounts of the Cellarer, the Almoner, the Hostiler, the Precentor, the Keeper of the Work, the Keepers of Cuddesdon and other places, or the Curtar.[a]

It has been well established that every officer was quite independent, and was not subordinate to any other, at least in so far as rendering account is concerned. A separate building was set apart for his particular use. He had a portion of the abbey estates specially assigned to him, and was bound to defray the charges which had been imposed on the office, as well as his due proportion of tenths and subsidies. But there was a complicated network of receipts and payments between the different offices which must have given a large amount of occupation to their holders. Mr. Bruce has suggested that these transactions were negociated "by the tally or the score," but there is nothing to show that tallies were in use among the obedientiars, though they are mentioned in the bailiffs' accounts of both Abingdon and Burcester. The lists of debtors and creditors prove that credit was sometimes given; this was unavoidable, and may have occurred only when the officer could not get in his regular dues. As a rule, business between the several offices appears to have been carried on by means of ready money, though barter might sometimes take its place. Everything however had its price, and if scores were kept by each officer against the rest, they might be partially or wholly balanced by scores run up by himself; but there is no evidence of any periodical settlements before the day of audit.

[a] The Curtarius is seldom mentioned in these accounts, but occurs more frequently in the bailiffs' accounts. This form of the word appears to be uncommon. In the Abingdon Chronicle, the more intelligible form of Curiarius is used. It was his province to look after the abbey close—curam totius curiæ agat; but he was one of the Abbot's officials, on the same footing with the Treasurer and Steward (ii. 351), and not one of the conventual obedientiars. He had the keys of the larder and granary, and visited the various manors to superintend the supplies of corn and malt. He was the first person to be informed by the porter of the arrival of a guest. His socius might be a cleric or a layman, at the Abbot's pleasure.

Of course, on the receipt side of the account, all the customary fixed profits of the office had to be entered in charge, whether they were received or not. In case any of them did not come in, the accountant would have to obtain, either in the current or in a following year, a formal deduction among the expenses, of which we have noticed one good instance.[a] He likewise appears to have been allowed to enter customary payments among the expenses, although these had not really been paid before the day of reckoning. Hence, on both sides of the accounts, there may occasionally be a doubt whether some alleged transaction actually took place or not; and it might naturally be asked, of what authority are these accounts, and can they be relied upon to prove anything? As these accounts are so inconsecutive, it must be allowed that there is some force in the objection; but it must not be assumed that it applies equally well to all accounts of this or any other kind. Any such doubt might at once be set at rest if we possessed the accounts of a few years following the one in which the disputed entry occurs; for, in the case of receipts, the accountant would be sure to get an allowance sooner or later if he were not paid; and as to expenses, the persons to whom the sums were allowed at the audit to be payable, would be sure to insist on payment being made to them.

It might have been supposed that the obedientiars, some of whom had studied at Oxford, would have drawn up their own accounts. In one or two early instances they seem to have done so, but at the end of the fourteenth century it became the regular practice for each officer to retain a special "clerk," who drew up the roll of account in the form then most usual, and made a duplicate of it, one copy being given up by the officer at the audit, the other remaining in his own hands. One such clerk might act for all or several of the officers.

"The day of the account" was at Midsummer, and wine was provided for the occasion, but it is nowhere stated before whom the accounts were rendered. This was probably done in the presence of the Abbot and some if not all of the obedientiars and monks, each officer being considered accountable to the whole Convent. A special office, called "the Exchequer," was set apart for the purposes of this audit. It occurs only once in the rolls, but is referred to again as "the Checker" in the letters patent of 1585 (p. 167). In this office there was a counting-board,[a] used for the reckoning of moneys, but not for the purpose of paying in treasure, for it is a peculiar feature of these accounts that no balances were paid over by the accountants, not even to the Abbot. Any officer who had a balance in his favour carried it to his next year's account, or handed it to his successor in office.

There are of course no accounts of the Abbot himself, as he was not responsible to anyone. He had his own estates, received his own rents, and paid his own expenses, or his Treasurer did so for him. The Abbot, however, had many points of contact with the obedientiars, from whom he received certain allowances, and to whom he made occasional payments, which were partly customary, partly voluntary. A yearly sum of 30s was paid to him by some of the bailiffs "for wine, wax, and spices withdrawn from him by the Treasurers of the Convent." The Prior, the Sub-prior, and the Third Prior appear to have had no secular charges attached to their dignities. In one instance the Prior is stated to have received moneys on behalf of the Treasurers of the Convent from the Abbot's Treasurer.

It is well known that it was the intention of the founder of the Benedictine Order that his followers should devote seven hours a day to manual labour, but that this and other strict rules gradually fell into disuse, as it was only natural they should do.[a] These accounts, indeed, do not give us to understand that the monks of Abingdon were industrious. For the enlargement and repair of the church, and for the building and repair of the tenements belonging to it, all kinds of artisans and labourers were freely employed, though the monks would no doubt superintend the former class of works, and execute the more ornate workmanship. We have seen that one of the brethren had a special reward for devising the inscriptions on the Cloister windows, as if he had done something supererogatory. With regard to agricultural labours, they stood in the same position as other lords of manors, and received assistance from their bond tenants, employing hired men and women when that assistance was insufficient. Hired labour became more in request when the "works of tenants" began to be commuted for money payments; but even this trouble was relegated to secular bailiffs and reeves, and in the fifteenth century to farmers,[a] the latter taking all responsibility, and paying a fixed rent for the demesne lands, while rent-collectors were appointed to gather the dues from tenants.

The labours of the monks would therefore be confined to the precincts of their close, to the offices situated round about the inner quadrangle,[b] to the gardens, of which there were several, to the orchard and the vineyard, and to the fishponds; fishing being also practised in the great moat encircling the abbey grounds. But even inside the close they had a large number of servants, some of whose duties are not particularised, others being esquires, grooms, cooks, shoemakers, tailors, laundresses, and dairywomen;[c] so that it may perhaps be supposed that the manual labours of the monks were not very arduous. Professor Vinogradoff has found that "the first cook and the gatekeeper of a celebrated abbey were real magnates, who held their offices by hereditary succession, and were enfeoffed with considerable estates";[d] but there is no trace of such a state of things of Abingdon.

Other professed objects of the Benedictine Order were the maintenance of schools and hospitals, and hospitality to travellers. The Convent maintained two students at Oxford, and a certain number of youths in the monastery, for whom an instructor was provided; but only a very small proportion of its revenues was expended in providing these educational advantages. The Priory of Burcester supported the same number of students in the University, although its revenues were not a tenth part as much as those of Abingdon.[a] In fact, the sole object of this provision was to recruit the number of the monks as it became reduced by death or removal. The "master of the scholars," otherwise the "instructor of the young men," was occasionally sent round the neighbouring villages to select promising youths to undergo the tonsure, and to study under him in the school of the monastery. From these scholars two students were chosen to be sent to the University, and maintained there at the Convent's expense. It nowhere appears that outsiders were admitted into the Abbey school.[b]

[a] See the Bishop of Salisbury's licence to this effect, so far as related to lands in his diocese; p. 132.

[b] See Mr. Blomfield's plan, before referred to.

[c] "In Glastonbury Abbey there were 66 servants, besides the workmen and foremen employed on the farm." (Prof. Vinogradoff's Villainage, p. 320.) The servants in Burcester Priory were also numerous; see History of Bicester, p. 130. The duties and privileges of the servants at Ramsey are set out in the Monasticon, ii. 549. The baker and the brewer of Abingdon are referred to chiefly in the Appendix.

Both the monasteries above contrasted were close to Oxford, but this neighbourhood was not the sole reason for their scholars being sent thither, for the Universities were furnished with undergraduates by most if not all of the conventual schools in the kingdom, no matter how far distant. Thus we find that the Priory of Finchale in Durham sent students to Oxford, and paid them a "pension."[c] It may therefore be inferred that such schools contributed many hundreds of scholars to the Universities.

The Abbey had numerous tenements in Oxford, and therefore it would have no difficulty in housing its students there; but the Priory of Burcester had to rent a small house in Oxford for the accommodation of its two students. It was a common thing for

[a] The Priory had, however, a special endowment for the purpose. Mr. Lyte says that the first known provision for the support of scholars at Oxford is contained in a deed of 1243, by which the Priory undertook to carry out the will of Alan Basset, and to maintain a chantry at Oxford, served by two scholars. (History of the University, p. 70.)

[b] Brayley and Britton (Berkshire, p. 161) assert that William I. passed the Easter of 1084 at Abingdon, and on leaving entrusted the education of his youngest son to the monks, to whose care Henry I. owed his surname of "Beauclerk." But the Chronicle of Abingdon merely states that Prince Henry spent that Easter at Abingdon, while his father and brothers were in Normandy, by command of the former. Mr. Stevenson considers that Robert, Earl of Leicester (1118-68), was educated in the Abbey in the time of William I. (Chronicle, vol. ii., pp. lxvi., lxxviii., 229).

[c] See Charters, &c., of Finchale, pp. lxx., ciii., cxxv. In the first of these places three students are named, apparently.

the townsmen to let houses for this purpose.[a] Mr. Lyte states that "an ordinary student could live at Oxford on 3s 4d a week in the reign of Edward I.," but these accounts refer to a later period. The monastic students would of course not be confined to their own houses, but would attend the schools. But before the date of the earliest roll in this series, the Benedictines had founded a college in Oxford for students of that Order. In 1279 they held a general chapter at Abingdon, which imposed a tax on all their monasteries for this purpose; but the project was really carried out by John, Lord Giffard, who founded Gloucester College.[b] It was no doubt to this College that the students of the Abbey would be sent if there were accommodation; but as it could hardly have contained all the Benedictine students from all parts, it is possible that the Abingdon students continued for a time to reside in a private house belonging to the abbey, though it is not so stated;[c] indeed, the Abbey's rents in

[a] History of the University, p. 69. Mr. Anstey appears to consider that these houses were necessarily "halls," but it is evident that they were merely ordinary tenements. (Munimenta Academica, p. xlv.) He also says, that "every religious house had, it would appear, its own schools" (p. lxii.), and that each house had a school for every purpose, grammar as well as the higher faculties. Compare Mr. Lyte's History, p. 103, note.

[c] The Valor Ecclesiasticus shows that the following sums of money were due from certain Colleges in Oxford to the Convent of Abingdon, some evidently being quit-rents for tenements in Oxford belonging to the Abbey, and which had been acquired by the Colleges:—A pension of 3s 4d from Queen's College; a rent resolute of 20s from University College out of the farm of Eastwerke in co. Berks; a quit-rent of 4s from Oriel College; a rent resolute of 10s from King Henry VIII.'s College; a quit-rent of 10s from Merton College, for [a tenement called] "Flowerdeluce"; a rent resolute of 14d from Lincoln College, and another of 18d from Magdalen College. On the other hand, the Abbot and Convent owed "certain customs" in West Drayton to New College. (Pp. 224, 229, 232, 239, 242, 250, 257, 273.) But the Valor does not show that the Abbey then had any tenements in Oxford. Its houses and shops in that "town" are however fully described in the Ministers' Accounts of 30-31 Henry VIII. Besides the above rents, St. Frideswide's College paid 10s 6d and "the Brodeyates Inn" 13s 4d yearly. A rent of 4d by the year was due from the Abbey to the churchwardens of St. Aldate's from tenements in "le Wynyarde," Abingdon.

Oxford are mentioned only in the earlier accounts. In the reign of Henry V. clerks were forbidden to reside in the houses of laymen in Oxford.[a]

From the earlier accounts it may be gathered that, as the two students were selected from the "juvenes" who were taught in the Abbey, so the monks were frequently selected from the students. While this system remained in force, if the monks were entirely selected from the students, the monastic body must have been composed of men of some education. Elsewhere, in the latter half of the fifteenth century, it is said that "young and illiterate persons" were admitted into the monkhood;[b] but here, at Abingdon, we find the Oxford students referred to down to 1470.

Next, as to hospitals, it is generally supposed that sick lay folk were received into monastic infirmaries, but we find no inkling of this at Abingdon; and, even if it were so, it has already been remarked that the whole expenses of the Infirmary were comparatively trifling. No hospital, in the sense of an infirmary, was provided in the town by the Convent, though there were almshouses, called hospitals, for certain numbers of aged poor, one having been founded by one of the Abbots, who seems to have charged the office of Lignar with a yearly payment of 13^{s} 4^{d} towards its support. This was St. John's Hospital, which stood outside the gate of the Abbey, over against St. Nicholas's church.[c]

With regard to hospitality, here once more we are not impressed by the liberality of this house, so far as we can judge of it from the evidence before us; but it must be borne in mind that we have no accounts of the Collarer, or of the Hostiler, if there were

[a] History of the University, p. 69. For an account of the career of a Benedictine student, see p. 104 of the same work. Mr. Lyte makes two other references which are interesting to us. "Through the exertions of the Abbot of Abingdon at the Papal Court, the University obtained from Sixtus IV., in 1479, a bull confirming the privileges granted by Innocent IV. in 1254" (p. 325). "The Abbot of Abingdon contributed twenty trees from his wood at Cumnor" towards the fabric of All Souls' College, founded by Archbishop Chicheley (p. 354).

[c] The Hospital also had a portion in Chilton church.

such an officer in this abbey.[a] There are only a few small payments for guests, and a larger number for supervenientes, all the latter apparently being officials who came on the business of the establishment. Some guests, it is stated, were in most abbeys entertained by the Abbot at his own table, others by the monks in their separate chamber, according to their rank, but the few guests referred to in the accounts were provided for by the monks.[b] In contrast with this apparent lack of hospitality, it may be noticed that the Canons of Burcester, a much smaller foundation, frequently at great expense entertained distinguished guests, to whom and to their servants large presents were made on their departure; but Burcester was under private patronage, and such munificence may have been politic.

As we find so few references to persons of distinction, it seems highly probable that all such visitors were entertained by the Abbot at his own charges. If there were many visitors of lower rank, the greater number of them must also have been provided for by the Abbot, for the monks appear to have kept very little company. A third class of guests, consisting of common travellers, would be received in the Hospice,[c] the inn or guest-house, which does not seem to have been kept up at any great cost.

The Hospice was originally attached to the abbey, though there would, as usual, be a separate entrance to it; but before 1414 it appears to have been superseded by the novum Hospitium, or new inn, situate somewhere in Abingdon, and which the Convent leased out at a yearly rent, leaving the lessee to derive what profit he could from those who passed through the town. This interpretation of the entries relating to the new inn is confirmed by Mr. Blom-

[a] He is not noticed in the accounts, but his duties are described at length in the treatise on the Obedientiars, p. 411. The Sacristan seems to have been attending to the Hospice in 1396-7.

[b] See Cutts, p. 55.

[c] It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between the two meanings of hospitium: sometimes it is an inn, sometimes a household. For the latter meaning, see pp. 150, 151. The Hospitium has been confounded with the Hostilaria, which in these accounts means "the office (or the estate) of the Hostiler," and not a "hostry" or "hostelry." The Latin term should rather be Englished as "the Hostilary," to avoid misconception. The new inn may have been identical with "Britonesin" (p. 119).

field's remarks[a] on the hospice at Burcester, which, he states, was "converted into a public inn" soon after the year 1379.

The lessee, it should be added, may have had a monopoly of the accommodation required by travellers, for the abbey possessed a writ of King Henry I., forbidding any one to be entertained or housed in the town of Abingdon save with the Abbot's licence.[b] Although this may have been only a temporary order, it seems to have been the recognition of a right; and there can be little doubt, as Mr. Stevenson says, that "the monastery was the only inn."[c]

The monasteries have always had the credit of having done much to relieve the poor, but the Convent of Abingdon do not appear to have been greatly troubled in this respect. Besides the formal provision on Maundy Thursday, there are few references to the poor, and these mostly consist of the administration of bequests made by pious donors, among whom were one or two of the Abbots. Payments were due to the poor of Culham on behalf of Abbot Nicholas, and there are two large payments to the poor of Cuddesdon at early dates. But here likewise it must be borne in mind that we have no accounts of the Almoner, whose special province it would be to dispense the alms of the abbey.

In the Institutio Eleemosynarii the Almoner was particularly required to assist the poor, and to buy clothes and shoes for widows and orphans "against Christmas." The treatise on the "Customs," however, shows that very small rents were assigned to this office, while payments were due from it to vicars and others.[d] To make up for the deficiency above noted, we may have recourse to an account of the Almoner of Ramsey, from which it appears that out of a total expenditure by that officer of 101^{l} odd, only 10^{l} was "distributed" to the poor once a year on All Souls' day, so

[a] P. 202. There is only one Hostiler's account of that priory, showing that very small sums were expended in the years 1377-9.

[b] MS. Cott. Claud. B. VI. f. 141^{b}. (Stevenson, ii. 80.)

[c] The Abbot claimed to be lord of the whole town. See Assize Rolls, Divers Counties, 7 Edw. I., m. 1, and County Placita, 19 Edw. III., No. 14. The former contains a long record touching tenements held of the Abbot in villenage.

that there was no organised system of relief.[a] On the other hand, the Cartulary of Ramsey states that two of the Abbots of that monastery left bequests for one hundred "poor brethren" out of lands acquired by them, and that the Almoner had certain rents "for feeding the poor."[b] And in respect of Abingdon itself, the Monasticon says of the Abbot, that "on each of the [fifteen] principal feasts on which it was usual for him to dine in the Refectory, he fed a hundred poor persons from his table."[c]

It may however be doubted whether these benefits were always enjoyed by the really poor. The tendency of such a system would be to create a class of "hangers-on," always ready to attend at the monastery on the well-known occasions when its bounty was to be distributed; and to absorb its charity. To a large extent that class would comprise the relatives and friends of the abbey servants, and perhaps those of members of the convent. Such people must have suffered considerably at the Dissolution. That the monastic alms were insufficient for the relief at least of the aged poor may be inferred from the fact that numerous almshouses were erected in all directions by private benevolence, even in the neighbourhood of the largest abbeys. Many of these have survived until the present day.

It may be further noted, as another tendency of the monastic method of almsgiving, that the funds originally provided for the purpose became diverted in a large measure to the payment of extrinsic expenses, while there was little or no increase in the almsgiving. This has always been a common fault of benevolent agencies, both lay and ecclesiastical.

[a] The Almoner's other expenses were: "In the spices of the Abbot and Convent, with the Master of the Novices, 11^{l} 13^{s} 4^{d}. In the jewels of the Abbot and Convent, 7^{l} 2^{s} 10^{d}." Besides payments for ale, "dishes," nuts, gifts to the Abbot and Prior, expenses of the office, stipends, &c. Total, 101^{l} 5^{s} 9^{d}. But his receipts for the year were only 77^{l} 15^{s} 10^{d}. (Ministers' Accounts, Ramsey.)

[b] Vol. i., 66, 103; ii., 218, 223; also 175, 176.

[c] The passage on which this statement is based begins with the words: "Hæc sunt quindecim principalia festa in quibus Abbas tenetur comedere in Refectorio"; their names being given. It ends thus: "et in quolibet festo pascet Abbas centum pauperes." See before, p. xiv.

On the whole, it may be conjectured that the expenditure of the Convent on the School and the Infirmary was intended for its own exclusive benefit; and that hospitality to ordinary travellers and relief of the poor did not consume more than a small fraction of its revenues, which, at the time of the Suppression, were estimated at 1876^{l} 10^{s} 9^{d} yearly, according to the Monasticon.

Neither the Valor Ecclesiasticus nor the Ministers' Accounts rendered after the Suppression distinguish between the revenues of the Abbot and those of the Monks. What were their relative proportions can therefore be gathered only from the Taxation of Pope Nicholas IV., which was completed in 1291. Extracts from the printed edition are appended, with a few corrections. Besides the temporalities, which alone have been extracted, the Abbot had numerous pensions and portions in parochial churches and tithes; but only one of the obedientiars is returned as having anything of the kind, namely, the Sacristan, who had the small pension of 6^{s} in the church of Estuldesle. These accounts prove that the obedientiars had far larger incomes than the Taxation would lead us to suppose, though allowance must be made, especially in the case of the Treasurers of the Convent, for such of the receipts as were derived from moneys circulating within the walls. Whether the Abbot's income exceeded the Taxation to the same extent does not appear, but it may be taken that he enjoyed the greater portion of the abbatial revenues, and disposed of it mostly at his own pleasure.

I have thus endeavoured to indicate the salient features of these accounts, and to point out what may and what may not be expected from them. If I have failed in any respect, I hope the Index will be found ample enough to supply the deficiency.

Before ending, I must thank Mr. S. R. Scargill-Bird, F.S.A., Assistant Keeper of the Public Records, for affording me every facility in transcribing and consulting these documents; and the Rev. J. C. Blomfield for lending me a copy of his valuable work.
